AG SESSIONS TO TALK PUBLICLY TO PANEL

1 U.S. Attorney General Jeff Sessions will testify publicly to a Senate panel on Tuesday, its chairman said, setting up another potentially dramatic hearing on possible ties between President Donald Trump's campaign and Russian meddling in the 2016 presidential race. Sessions is likely to face tough questioning from Senate Intelligence Committee members over his dealings with Russian officials during the campaign and whether he had a role in the firing of former FBI Director James Comey, who testified last week before the same panel. Until a statement on Monday from committee Chairman Richard Burr, a Republican, it had been unclear whether Sessions would testify in an open or closed setting. REUTERS

KHAMENEI BLAMES US FOR REGIONAL INSTABILITY

2 Iran's Supreme Leader Ayatollah Ali Khamenei blamed the United States for instability in the Middle East and said Washington's fight against the Islamic State militant group was "a lie." "You (the United States) and your agents are the source of instability in the Middle East ... who created Islamic State? America ... America's claim of fighting against Islamic State is a lie," Khamenei said in a meeting with high-ranking Iranian officials, according to his official website.Iran and the United States cut diplomatic ties shortly after Iran's 1979 Islamic revolution and enmity to Washington has long been a rallying point for hardline supporters of Khamenei in Iran. Khamenei has made several statements denouncing the United States since the start of the Muslim holy month of Ramadan. REUTERS

WALL ST. FALLS AS APPLE DRAGS TECH LOWER

3 Apple shares added to last week's drop on Monday to lead a market downturn as tech, still the best performing S&P 500 sector this year, succumbed under its own weight. Mizuho Securities cut its rating on Apple to "neutral" from "buy" on Monday, saying the stock had outperformed this year and that the "upcoming product cycle is fully captured at current levels." Apple shares, down 2.4 percent on Monday, are up about 26 percent so far in 2017. The S&P technology sector fell 0.8 percent after dropping 2.7 percent Friday for its largest two-day decline in nearly a year. The tech-heavy Nasdaq Composite underperformed the S&P 500 as the ongoing rout in the sector sparked a search for value elsewhere. REUTERS

UBER CEO KALANICK LIKELY TO TAKE LEAVE

5 Uber Technologies Inc. CEO Travis Kalanick is likely to take a leave of absence from the troubled ride-hailing company, but no final decision has yet been made, according to a source familiar with the outcome of a Sunday board meeting. Emil Michael, senior vice president and a close Kalanick ally, has left the company, the source said. At the Sunday meeting, the company's board adopted a series of recommendations from the law firm of former U.S Attorney General Eric Holder following a sprawling, multimonth investigation into Uber's culture and practices, according to a board representative. Uber will tell employees about the recommendations on Tuesday, said the representative, who declined to be identified. The company is also adding a new independent director, Nestle executive and Alibaba board member Wan Ling Martello, a company spokesman said. REUTERS

Gregg Henry stars as a Donald Trump-esque Julius Caesar in Shakespeare in the Park's "Julius Caesar." JOAN MARCUS

Shakespeare in the Park's 'Julius Caesar' takes aim at Donald Trump

The controversy is intense after New York's Public Theater updates classic political tragedy about the Roman dictator to turn him into Donald Trump.

EVA KIS
eva.kis@metro.us

A prestigious New York theater's production of "Julius Caesar" has raised controversy for casting a Donald Trump look-alike as the murdered dictator.

In the Public Theater's annual Shakespeare in the Park production of Shakespeare's political tragedy about the death of democracy, the Roman ruler is played by "Scandal" actor Gregg Henry, in a suit and red tie with a mop of wispy blond hair and a Slavic-accented wife.

About halfway through the play, Caesar is assassinated by his fellow senators because they think he'd become too powerful and threatened Rome's democratic government.

The parallel was a step too far for two sponsors. Delta Air Lines and Bank of America have both pulled their support of the event.

"No matter what your political stance may be, the graphic staging of 'Julius Caesar' at this summer's Free Shakespeare in the Park does not reflect Delta Air Lines' values," Delta said via Twitter, adding that the "artistic and creative direction crossed the line on the standards of good taste."

"The Public Theater chose to present 'Julius Caesar' in such a way that was intended to provoke and offend," according to Bank of America's statement. "Had this intention been made known to us, we would have decided not to sponsor it."

"We stand completely behind our production of 'Julius Caesar,'" the Public Theater said in a statement. "We recognize that our interpretation of the play has provoked heated discussion; audiences, sponsors and supporters have expressed varying viewpoints and opinions. Such discussion is exactly the goal of our civically engaged theater; this discourse is the basis of a healthy democracy."

After Caesar's death, the Roman republic quickly spirals into chaos, ending with the deaths of the men who conspired against him and ending democracy for almost 2,000 years. On that basis, the Public's statement continues, "Our production of 'Julius Caesar' in no way advocates violence toward anyone. Shakespeare's play, and our production, make the opposite point: Those who attempt to defend democracy by undemocratic means pay a terrible price and destroy the very thing they are fighting to save."

The show is presented free in New York's Central Park through June 18.

This isn't the first time criticism of Donald Trump has landed an artist in trouble. Last week, CNN fired Kathy Griffin from her longtime role as co-host of its "New Year's Eve Live" program after an image of her holding a severed head made to look like Trump leaked online.

Criticizing the current president became its own cottage industry before he even reached the White House. Many comedians, actors and artists have protested his policies through their work, whether it's Comedy Central's "The President Show" with Anthony Atamanuik, or musicals in which Russian President and alleged Trump-backer Vladimir Putin gets a golden shower.

Here's how hot it will get in Boston

The city could be in the midst of a heat wave, the National Weather Service said.

KRISTIN TOUSSAINT
@kristindakota
kristin.toussaint@metro.us

After a string of mild weather days, it's finally heating up in Boston.

If you enjoyed the high temps on Sunday, there's more where that came from, according to the National Weather Service. In fact, Boston may be in the midst of a heat wave.

Boston hit a high of 92 degrees Sunday, the weather service noted, and reached a high of 95 on Monday.

Though that sounds sweltering, it may not be a record high for the region. According to the National Weather Service, Boston reached 96 degrees on June 12, 1973, a temperature that hasn't been topped since.

Providence and Worcester may have hit record-breaking highs on Monday, though. The record for Worcester is 90 degrees, also from 1973, and the city tied that record on Monday. Providence's record high, again from 1973, is 94; the Rhode Island city reached 95 on Monday, setting a new record.

Neither Worcester nor Providence saw temps above 90 degrees on Sunday, meaning those areas aren't part of the possible heat wave.

PROJECTED HIGH FOR BOSTON ON TUESDAY, ACCORDING TO THE NATIONAL WEATHER SERVICE

A heat wave, the weather service notes, means that temperatures must meet or exceed 90 degrees for three consecutive days.

As of 11 a.m. on Monday, Boston checked in at 88 degrees. Along with high temps, it's expected to be humid in Boston, meaning the warm weather will feel even muggier. This isn't the end of the high temps either, the service said, but there will be some relief.

"Temperatures will drop a little at night, with most places having early Tuesday morning readings between 65 and 75," forecasters said. "Tuesday promises to be another hot day, but with scattered afternoon and evening thunderstorms."

After those evening storms, the week looks a little bit cooler. Forecasts predict a high of 73 on Wednesday, 71 on Thursday and 70 on Friday.

Though last week saw chilly temperatures — last Tuesday had a high of only 52 degrees with lots of rain, the weather service reminded residents — these aren't the first warm days of the year. Boston reached a record-breaking high for May 18 when it hit 92 degrees.

GE CEO Jeff Immelt to be replaced in early August

Immelt oversaw the company's transition to move its headquarters from Connecticut to Boston.

KRISTIN TOUSSAINT

kristin.toussaint@metro.us

General Electric's new Boston headquarters isn't the only change coming to the company. GE announced Monday that current CEO Jeff Immelt is stepping down on August 1.

Immelt has served as CEO for 16 years and will be replaced by John Flannery, currently the president and CEO of GE Healthcare.

Immelt, 61, oversaw the company's decision to relocate its headquarters from Connecticut to Boston. After he steps down from his position as CEO, he will continue to be chairman of the board through to his retirement from GE on Dec. 31, 2017.

The leadership changes have been detailed in a plan by GE Board of Directors for years, the company said.

"The plan for the GE CEO transition process was set in 2011," said Jack Brennan, lead independent director for GE's board, in statement. "With the GE Capital pivot behind us and the company's transition to Boston complete, this is the ideal time for change. The board is confident that in the years to come, GE investors and employees will benefit from Jeff's hard work."

Immelt was onsite at the groundbreaking for Boston's GE headquarters last month, alongside Mayor Marty Walsh and Gov. Charlie Baker. The company said it

"The plan for the GE CEO transition process was set in 2011."

Jack Brennan, lead independent director for GE's board isn't altering its plans to build a three-building, $100 million Fort Point campus, according to the Boston Globe.

The headquarters is expected to be completed in 2018, meaning Immelt won't be with the company when the final product is unveiled. Immelt bought a $7.5 million home on Commonwealth Avenue in Back Bay last year ahead of the move, according to Boston Magazine.

Flannery, 55, began working at GE Capital in 1987. He's moved across the globe for various leadership positions at the company, including South America, Asia and India.

"Today's announcement is the greatest honor of my career," Flannery said in a statement. "I am privileged to have spent the last 16 years at the company working for Jeff, one of the greatest business leaders of our time. He has transformed the GE portfolio, globalized the company and created a vision for the GE of the future by positioning the company to lead in digital and additive manufacturing. In the next few months, my focus will be on listening to investors, customers and employees to determine the next steps for GE."

Flannery — a Red Sox fan, according to the Globe, who named his dog after right fielder Mookie Betts — will move to Boston from the Chicago area.

The best way to beat Boston rush-hour traffic might surprise you

Cyclists, drivers, MBTA riders, runners and more raced Monday in the fifth annual Boston Rush Hour Challenge.

Boston's congested rush-hour roadways are no match for commuters on two wheels.

Bicyclists took the top two spots in Monday morning's fifth annual Boston Rush Hour Challenge. The friendly competition pits people driving cars, riding bikes, taking the MBTA, bike-sharing with a Hubway and using just their feet against each other to see who can make it through Boston rush-hour traffic to reach their destination fastest.

Though the challenge is a race of sorts, organizers say the goal is to show the different kinds of challenges that different kinds of commuters face during Boston rush hour.

"What this event does is highlight that, no matter who you are or how you get around, we all have challenges and should all be working together to improve our streets," Stacy Thompson, executive director of the LivableStreets Alliance, said in a statement.

The morning commute challenge was new this year — typically the Boston Rush Hour Challenge has tested different modes of transport during the evening commute, but Andrew McFarland of LivableStreets said the results were pretty similar.

"The personal car has almost always been in dead last," he said. And those results rang true Monday as well.

In the challenge, a driver, biker, runner, MBTA rider, Hubway rider and Copenhagen Wheel e-assist bike raced from Dudley Square to Faneuil Hall, starting off at 8 a.m. sharp.

The Copenhagen Wheel e-assist bike — a motor-assisted bicycle — came in first at 13 minutes and 48 second.

Second was the personal bike, at 15:28.

Third place was the runner, arriving in 21 minutes, 15 seconds.

The MBTA rider took fourth place, arriving in 23 minutes and 55 seconds.

Fifth was the Hubway rider, finishing in 28 minutes and 48 seconds.

Last place, of course, was the driver.

"I think the lesson we take away from this competition is that everyone uses multiple modes to get around, and we just want to draw attention to all these different options," McFarland said. "Some are not only faster, but more enjoyable and have other benefits, like for health and the environment."

For the evening commute, the contestants competed with the same modes but traveled from Faneuil Hall to Redbones in Davis Square, Somerville. The motorized Copenhagen Wheel bike won the afternoon race as well, proving that two wheels still gets the better of four in Boston rush-hour traffic. For a full list of results visit Metro.us/boston.

Make the most of your summer internship

There's ways to go above and beyond.

SARA FEINSTEIN
@SaraBFeinstein
sara.feinstein@metro.us

Internships are a crucial way to gain experience and advance your career. ISTOCK

A summer internship is a great opportunity to enhance your résumé and begin learning the skills you'll need to enter the workforce.

But for many students, jumping from classroom learning into the daily challenges on the job can oftentimes be challenging.

We spoke to Rhea Wong, executive director of Breakthrough New York, for some tips that'll help you get the most out of the internship experience:

Be a proactive problem solver

"It's better to ask if you don't know, than to assume and do the wrong thing," says Wong.

But there is one caveat: Don't ask questions that you can find the answer to yourself, she says.

Rather than asking, "How do I make an Excel spreadsheet?" — something you could easily figure out by doing a quick Google search — interns should be asking more specific questions, like "How would you like to have this Excel sheet presented?"

In other words, they should make a conscious effort to be proactive problem solvers before seeking out the help of staffers.

Make connections

Interns have a tendency to stay in their comfort zone and mingle with fellow interns, says Wong, "but the truth is, those interns aren't really going to be able to help them advance their career."

Instead, they should be trying to form relationships with other staffers. After all, "An internship is a great opportunity to build a professional network, so they should be taking advantage of that," says Wong.

So take the initiative to make those connections. "Frankly, staffers are busy. Generally, they're not going to say no to a request to sit down and have coffee or lunch with you, but they might not go out of their way to make that happen," she says. In that sense, "It's really on the intern to build that bridge."

Go above and beyond

"A lot of times, interns will be told what to do, but it's the exceptional intern that goes above and beyond and anticipates what might be needed," says Wong. Perhaps you're interning at a real-estate firm and you've finished your work for the day. You could start researching other buildings in the area. "Not only is that a great way to learn, but it's also a great way to market yourself as somebody who has a can-do attitude," she says.

Plus, the more you're able to add value to the company, the more responsibility you'll get — and the more likely you are to be considered for a job later down the line, she says.

"Think about communication"

- Read over all emails to make sure they're professional, accurate and well-written.
- Resist the temptation to complain to co-workers and other interns.
- Avoid taking social media or texting breaks during the day.
- Never put anything in writing that you wouldn't be comfortable having associated with your name in public.

Cambridge College is moving!

Come visit us at our new state-of-the art campus in Boston

Just in time for the start of the Fall 2017 semester, Cambridge College is moving to the other side of the Charles River.

The new state-of-the art campus in the historic Hood Park in Boston, MA is easily accessible from communities throughout Greater Boston and the surrounding areas. With more than 100,000 square feet of space, the new location will better serve the College's ever-growing student body by offering advanced technology, flexible classrooms, student-centered amenities and ample parking.

"For over 45 years our mission has focused on creating access, opportunity and an environment where adult learners can learn, thrive and succeed," said Susan M. Ifill, Chair of the Board of Trustees for Cambridge College. Ms. Ifill, an alumna of its Graduate School of Management further stated, "We see an opportunity in this decision to think creatively about how we continue to evolve our programs, services and partnerships to support our mission."

What remains the same is Cambridge College's commitment to combining superior education with expert faculty and a multi-cultural, multi-generational student body to provide a unique, affordable college experience that fits each student's schedule, budget and needs. We offer:

- Fully accredited, cutting-edge curriculums taught by expert, hands-on faculty members.
- More than 50 undergraduate, graduate and certificate programs in healthcare, education, psychology and management through the School of Education, School of Management, School of Psychology and Counseling and School of Undergraduate Studies.
- Flexibility with online, night and weekend classes available.
- Affordability for a great education AND a great value.

Another benefit for students is that the non-profit college will now be able to unite all graduate programs under one roof. "A single campus model will more effectively meet the needs of our current and prospective students. The Hood Park campus will offer a number of benefits for our college," said Deborah Jackson, President of Cambridge College.

How a gap year can benefit you

The "gap year" is back in the spotlight — and for a good reason, too. Fun aside, research shows that students actually perform better in college and get more out of school when they take a well-structured year off. We spoke with Ryan Pendoley of Thinking Beyond Borders and the executive director of the American Gap Association, Ethan Knight, to find out how students can benefit from this out-of-classroom learning.

Stand out from the pack

Noting a gap year on your résumé is a great way to highlight your individuality, says Knight. While other students might have been a part of school clubs and kept straight A's, there aren't many students who can say they traveled to India to volunteer in community health clinics. In that sense, "It's a way to demonstrate that there's much more dimension to you, and that you might have more to contribute to the workforce, to your team and, just as importantly, that you have understanding of different cultures."

A gap year gives students hands-on experience. ISTOCK

Discover your interests

"I like to think of a gap year, in its highest evolution, as a way of trying to figure out if [your career choice] is actually what you would enjoy doing every day," says Knight. By getting hands-on experience — all aspects of a gap year incorporate some element of "learning by doing" — students essentially get to experiment with a career before they buy into it.

Gain real-world perspective

While much of our college time is spent studying theories, says Pendoley, "a gap year is a way to go out and get real-world context for those theories." In other words, it's a way to turn textbook knowledge into reality, he explains.

That means truly delving into issues and watching them unfold. Knight uses the example of environmental theory: "We can talk about environmentalism, but it's not until you go overseas to a heavily deforested area where you're planting trees and talking to locals that you begin to understand the complexity and interrelation of everything." About the Boston Architectural College

The Boston Architectural College (BAC) is an independent spatial design college in Boston's Back Bay. The College combines classroom and studio learning with practical work experience in some of the city's most prestigious design firms. Students are taught, mentored, and advised by more than 400 practicing professionals, strengthening the connection between workplace experience and classroom learning.

Founded in 1889 as a club for practicing architects, the BAC has remained closely tied to Boston's professional design community. According to its original charter, the founders created the Boston Architectural Club to bring together those "interested in the profession of architecture with a view to mutual encouragement and help in studies."

Sticking to its founding philosophy and desire to make design accessible to all, the BAC is an open admission school with a goal to diversify the design professions. This makes a design education possible for many talented students who would not otherwise have such an opportunity.

The BAC Has Expanded Over The Past 128 Years And Now Offers Four Disciplines:

- ARCHITECTURE
- LANDSCAPE ARCHITECTURE
- INTERIOR ARCHITECTURE
- DESIGN STUDIES

The BAC's Degree Programs

- Bachelor of Architecture
- Bachelor of Science in Architecture (leads to two-year Master of Architecture)
- Master of Architecture (classroom or online)
- Bachelor of Interior Architecture
- Master of Interior Architecture
- Master of Science in Interior Architecture (online)
- Bachelor of Landscape Architecture
- Master of Landscape Architecture
- Bachelor of Design Studies

How 'Bachelor in Paradise' ended before it got started

Looks like things got a little bit too real.
ALL PHOTOS GETTY IMAGES

"Bachelor in Paradise" halted filming after two contestants got busy in the pool, as two contestants on a dating reality show are wont to do. Us Weekly broke the news that production on the show had been shut down due to allegations of misconduct.

In a statement, Warner Bros. elaborated. "We have suspended production and we are conducting a thorough investigation of the allegations. Once the investigation is complete, we will take the appropriate responsive action."

Apparently, DeMario Jackson and Corinne Olympios met at the bar. Alcohol was flowing! There was making out and what TMZ delicately calls "intense rubbing," and a series of sex acts!

But one of the show producers saw the film and was uncomfortable with what was shot — and filed a formal complaint.

What's the big deal of two grown adults enjoying some adult pool time in front of the camera of a reality television show? I mean, besides the obvious? Hopefully nothing sinister is going on here.

Khloe Kardashian wants to have Tristan Thompson's babies

Khloe Kardashian really wants to populate this world with miniature versions of herself, and because of that we should be utterly terrified.

On Sunday night's finale of "Keeping Up With The Kardashians," Khloe ran into some new, unexpected fertility issues. The 32-year-old learned that despite her age, her uterine follicles and ovaries are much older than expected.

But then, with whiplash speed, by the end of the episode, ol' Koko gets some good news. After ditching her birth control for about three months, her doctor finds more follicles in her uterus, which means her uterus is ready for babies. Tristan Thompson's babies, to be exact. Khloe and Thompson — a 26-year-old Canadian dude who plays for the Cleveland Cavaliers — have been together since some time last year.

"It was all the birth control," the reality star explained. As soon as I get the hormones out of my system, I'm the f—ing Easter bunny." I don't know what the Easter bunny did to be brought into this, but I do believe he deserves better. Unless he's being played by Sean Spicer.

The world isn't ready.

Where is Cameron Diaz, anyway?

You may have noticed that Cameron Diaz has basically disappeared from Hollywood. Her last two films? Both in 2014.

Now, the 44-year-old is opening up about taking a break from being a movie star. "I just went, 'I can't really say who I am to myself,' which is a hard thing to face up to," she said at the Goop Wellness Summit over the weekend. I don't know what that means, but OK!

She also opened up about marrying Benji Madden of Good Charlotte. On getting married at the age of 41, she said, "I think it's a matter of, I just hadn't met my husband, you know?" She continued, "I had boyfriends before. And there's a really, really distinct difference between husbands and boyfriends."

She's still around here, somewhere.

Diaz didn't really say anything about being sister-in-law to erstwhile star of "The Simple Life," Nicole Richie (who is married to Benji's twin brother, Joel). I mean, they're twins! Are there ever any mix-ups? Is it like "Parent Trap," but weird and grown up and vaguely sexual?

Meghan Markle plays coy, as usual

Meghan Markle is a beautiful lady and an actress on "Suits." Also, she is dating Prince Harry — have you heard of him?

Anyway, the 35-year-old actress and Royal Boo™ attended the ATX Television Festival in Austin this weekend. There, she took part in a script-reading of the original pilot of "Suits" with her co-stars.

Then, of course, a wily reporter asked Markle whether or not she "hoped to marry Prince Harry." Which is real journalism, you know? I mean, that's really the question we all want the answer to. Who cares about climate change and global warming when there's the possibility that Meghan Markle and Prince Harry might get married after dating for not even a full year!? No, seriously.

Markle responded pretty predictably, by not responding at all. She just gave a smile. Which, fine.

Just shout it from the rooftops already.

Don't let his smile throw you — Common is tough as a Marine sergeant in "Megan Leavey," in theaters now.
JACOB YAKOB / BLEECKER STREET

Common wants us to stop fighting

The rapper-actor talks "Megan Leavey" and believing after darkness comes light.

MATT PRIGGE
matt.prigge@metro.us

There aren't many people as positive as Common. On his records, he speaks truth to power. In person, though, he's all about love — a word he uses as though it was about to go out of style. In the drama "Megan Leavey," the rapper-actor, 45, plays a tough cookie: a sergeant who gives tough love to Kate Mara's Marine. Her character has been tasked with handling a combat dog, who's been trained to sniff for IEDs during the Iraq War. The movie winds up being about their bond. And Common loves that.

Most movies about the military are political. This one isn't at all.

It's not a war story; it's a love story. The overall theme of love makes you not get into the political side of it. You get into the human story about a woman who needs some love. Who doesn't need that? We can all relate to that, no matter our political perspective or nationality or religion.

GETTY IMAGES

These days we need more movies that bring us together.

That's the stuff I want to be a part of — telling real people's stories. Those stories bust us out of boxes. I'm not saying this movie is "Moonlight," but "Moonlight" took you out of the aspect of thinking, 'This is a dude who wears a do-rag. He's just a gangster and he just sells dope.' The character Mahershala [Ali] played, he cared for this kid [played by Alex Hibbert]. Even my character here, you think, "Oh, he's a sergeant in the Marines, he's going to be one thing." But he's not. This dude is strong and disciplined, but at the same time he cares.

It's hard to be optimistic right now. How pessimistic do you feel these days?

I think it's getting better. As difficult as it seems on the outside, on the inside people want to see good for human beings. I don't care if you're Muslim, Jewish, gay, transgender, Latino, black — we all gotta help each other and get through this thing together. We know we don't have all the solutions. But we know that the important thing is to make a better world for each other. So how do we do that? The government structure may not think like that, but people do think like that. We work towards a better world. These dark times are going to bring the light, I really believe that.

Mix 104.1's Kennedy and her dog Elvis will be there. ALL PHOTOS PROVIDED

Take your pooch out for a night at the Seaport Hotel

Have a paw-some time at Canine and Cocktails.

CATHERINE PERLOFF
letters@metro.us

Even in today's polarized political climate, it's hard to object to a night of dogs, alcoholic beverages and the sight of the sun setting over the Boston Harbor. This experience is exactly what's in store at this summer's first Canine and Cocktails event at the Seaport Hotel on Wednesday.

The event, emceed by Mix 104.1 radio personality Kennedy Elsey and her dog Elvis, features treats for both pooches and their owners. Seaport Executive Chef Richard Rayment is whipping up organic dog treats, which pups can enjoy on-site and in special "doggie bags," while their human counterparts can pick from a selection of cocktails at the cash bar.

Tickets are $10, and will benefit the nonprofit Great Dog Rescue New England. Betsy Herald, GDRNE's assistant director, says fundraisers such as these are necessary to pay for much needed emergency medical procedures.

"The adoption fee just [pays for] the basic running of the rescue, vaccinations," Herald says. "We really do need these fundraisers when things go wrong and something more extreme is needed."

The GDRNE is a completely volunteer-run organization with no advertising, board of directors or even shelter. Instead, the rescue relies on about 40 "fosters" who care for the dogs until they can find a permanent home.

Proceeds benefit Great Dog Rescue New England.

"We don't think it's healthy for dogs to be kept in cages," Herald says.

Those looking to own a furry pal can meet several canines up for adoption. While petting and playing is encouraged, attendees cannot leave with a dog until they go through the formal adoption process.

Aside from drinking and dog watching, attendees can also test their luck at the raffle, which offers prizes such as an overnight stay at the Seaport Hotel and dinner for two at Tamo Bistro & Bar, the hotel's restaurant serving New England-inspired cuisine.

Dog lovers who can't make the June event still have two other chances for booze and boxer hounds this summer, as the Canine and Cocktail event will return to the Seaport Hotel July 19 and Aug. 9.

Your guide to sunscreen

ALL PHOTOS ISTOCK

A dermatologist talks us through the best practices for optimal skin protection.

KATE MOONEY
kate.mooney@metro.us

Sun's out; time to slather on the sunscreen. But which one? We know sunscreen is essential to protecting against skin cancer, but with so many on the market and so much conflicting information out there — for example, when Consumer Reports and the Environmental Working Group both put out their annual lists of the best sunscreens, the lists varied drastically — how do you pick the right one for you?

The questions don't stop there. How often should you apply sunscreen? What does "broad spectrum" mean? To better make sense of the terms and discuss best options, we spoke with dermatologist Dr. Kally Papantoniou, who helped us break it down, so you can enjoy your summer in the sun without stressing too much about your health.

There are several factors to getting adequate sun protection.

Should you use mineral-based or chemical-based sunscreens?

Both types of sunscreen are equally effective, but use different technology to protect your skin. Mineral-based sunscreens use zinc oxide and/or titanium dioxide to physically block ultraviolet rays, while chemical-based sunscreens use active ingredients, such as oxybenzone and avobenzone, that absorb the rays, break them down and convert them into heat.

Oxybenzone, in particular, is a controversial ingredient because a study in which it was fed to rats showed it to be a hormone disrupter. However, no evidence suggests that it's a risk to humans, and the American Academy of Dermatology and the Skin Cancer Foundation both approve its use.

"There's no data that shows that it does anything in people," explains Papantoniou. "The chemicals in high doses can have an effect on your endocrine system, but they're such small amounts [in sunscreen] that we're not seeing that happen in people."

In the past, folks have opted out of mineral-based sunscreen because it would leave a thick, chalky white residue on your face (think: white-nosed lifeguard). But that's no longer the case, now that the products contain micronized zinc, which are smaller particles with less visibility.

If you have sensitive skin, mineral is a better choice than chemical. "When they break down, sometimes the chemicals can be irritating or a cause for allergy," explains Papantoniou. If you're worried about acne, make sure the label reads "noncomedogenic."

Which number SPF is best?

The AAD recommends the use of SPF 30 or higher.

Papantoniou echoes this for daily use, but suggests if you're going to be outside in direct sunlight, opt for SPF 50 — especially if you have a skin condition like melasma (skin discoloration) or have previously had skin cancer.

"Anything above 50 becomes equivocal," she notes. "There's such minute differences, between, say, SPF 50 and 100."

Make sure what you're using says "broad spectrum" on the label, indicating the sunscreen will protect against both UVA and UVB rays.

How often should you apply sunscreen?

Apply sunscreen daily. If you're just going to work and you won't be outside, once in the morning is fine, Papantoniou says. (If you're going to take a lunch break and sit out in the sun, it's a good idea to reapply first.)

But, if you're going to be outside and active, especially sweating or in the water, you should reapply every 90 minutes. "Sunscreen is water resistant, not waterproof," she says. "If you go swimming or sweat, you need to reapply."

Seek extra protection

Sunscreen is not the be-all, end-all for sun protection. You should also be wearing hats, staying inside on particularly hot days, or at least ducking into the shade when you can. "Sunscreen will help prevent you from getting a burn, that's what that SPF factor is," she explains. "It doesn't mean it blocks off all the light from passing through and stimulating your skin."

Also: Even if your makeup or concealer says SPF on it, you still need to use a moisturizer underneath. "Unless you're going to work looking like a clown [wearing] a thick layer of makeup, it's not enough."

Paul George looks for separation against Avery Bradley this past season. GETTY IMAGES

WOULD A PAUL GEORGE TRADE MAKE SENSE FOR CELTICS?

There are two big red flags for Celtics boss Danny Ainge when it comes to a potential trade of the No. 1 overall pick in the 2017 NBA Draft for Pacers swingman Paul George.

The first is that George can become a free agent in the summer of 2018. The second is that once he becomes a free agent, he seemingly has his mind locked on becoming a member of the Los Angeles Lakers.

New Pacers president of basketball operations Kevin Pritchard, who was elevated to that position from GM in Indy after Larry Bird stepped down, is saying all the right things currently when it comes to George. Pritchard wants George to stay put, and he thinks he can build a winner around him in Indianapolis.

OPINION

@burke_metro

"Paul and I talked, I don't know, 45 minutes to an hour," Pritchard told the Indy Star recently. "We talked about a lot of things, and in every scenario he wanted to be here. He kept coming back to one statement that hits me hard, and we all know: He wants to win. … The Pacers want to win. We're on the same page."

Of course, that's all window dressing. Pritchard wants to make it look like everything is going smoothly in Indy when Paul's desire to leave Indy for greener pastures (no pun intended) is plain to see.

George tweeted a blank reply (and quickly deleted it) to a Bleacher Report story last month with a headline that read: "Paul Pierce thinks Celtics should trade No. 1 overall pick." It's curious in that George rarely "replies" to anyone or anything on Twitter (he's "replied" just twice since the Celtics tweet).

Butt tweet maybe? It's possible, but I'm going to wager to say that George had something on his mind that day that did not involve him buying Midwest real estate.

As for the rental player stuff for Ainge and the Celtics — yes, giving up a shot at a supposed once-in-a-generation talent like Markelle Fultz for a guy who could potentially leave after one season is an incredible gamble. But at the same time, George is just entering his prime at age 27. There's zero guarantee that Fultz will become a perennial All-Star and a player who averages over 20 points per game in the NBA like George.

This "rent a superstar" gamble is one that Ainge has talked about over and over again throughout the years — during times he's been pressed on bringing in players like Kevin Love and Chris Paul. Ainge hasn't put his money where his mouth is when it comes to this type of thing, but hell — I believe him.

This "rent a superstar" gamble is one that Ainge has talked about over and over again.

At the height of the Love to Boston rumors three years ago, Ainge told 98.5 FM's Toucher and Rich that he "would be open to trading for a high-caliber player in their last year without an agreement to an extension."

Ainge firmly believes that once a player gets a taste of the Celtics organization, particularly when the Garden is bumping and Boston is a contender, that player will fall in love. The fact that the Celtics would, in this scenario, be able to pay George more money than any other team in free agency doesn't hurt either.

As for the allure of the Lakers (George is from Palmdale, California, and grew up a Lakers fan), who knows what that franchise will look like a year from now? The good money says they'll draft Lonzo Ball at No. 2, but then these LeBron James free agency rumors have popped up recently too. George would be a logical choice to join LeBron in LA in the summer of 2018, but LeBron would likely push for the Lakers to bring in his buddies Carmelo Anthony (who plays the same position as George) and Dwyane Wade prior to that ever happening.

LeBron jumping to the Western Conference would also give the Celtics a wide-open path to the NBA Finals for the foreseeable future.

Former Red Sox and current White Sox prospect Yoan Moncada should be seeing the big league lights soon. GETTY IMAGES

FANTASY BASEBALL: A LOOK AT FUTURE SUPERSTARS

Kyle Bishop is a lead MLB columnist at RotoBaller.com. His articles and Fantasy Baseball Rankings are your secret weapon for winning fantasy leagues.

With the Brewers promoting top prospects Lewis Brinson and Josh Hader this weekend, fantasy owners may be wondering who's next — and whether they're worth a roster spot. Here are some names to keep an eye on in the coming weeks. Obviously, in any competitive dynasty league these guys are long gone, but they should be widely available in most other formats.

Yoan Moncada, 3B, Chicago White Sox

The consensus top prospect in the game, Moncada has slumped since returning from a minor thumb injury. He's still hitting a respectable .282/.374/.441, though, with seven home runs and 13 stolen bases in his first 50 games at Triple-A. Moncada just turned 22 and needs to improve his contact rate to reach his fullest potential, but he's an incredibly talented player and the White Sox will be sellers at the deadline. Bet on seeing him in the majors soon.

Stash in all but the shallowest leagues.

Amed Rosario, SS, New York Mets

Not much has gone right for the Mets this season at the major league level. Their rotation, formerly the envy of MLB, has been ravaged by injury and ineffectiveness, and they're already nine games out of a wild-card spot. On the bright side, their top prospect has been fantastic in his first taste of Triple-A. Rosario is hitting .339/.381/.498 with six homers and 11 steals in 61 games. With Neil Walker likely to be on the trading block and both Asdrubal Cabrera and Jose Reyes playing poorly, a promotion seems imminent. While it's important to note that he's just 21 and that his current numbers are inflated by the run environment of the Pacific Coast League, Rosario has shown himself to be big-league ready.

YOAN MONCADA HAS 13 STOLEN BAGS IN 50 GAMES THIS SEASON

Stash in 12-plus team leagues.

Jacob Faria, SP, Tampa Bay Rays

We got a glimpse of what Faria can do when he was called up for a spot start on Wednesday. After allowing a run in the first inning, the 23-year-old shut down the White Sox, pitching into the seventh and allowing only one runner to reach scoring position. As a reward, he was immediately sent back to Triple-A. The Rays tend to bring their prospects along slowly, but this is Faria's second go-round at the highest level and he's demonstrated improvement. Should Tampa decide to shop Chris Archer and/or Jake Odorizzi this summer, Faria would almost certainly be the first option to replace them.

Overactive bladder (OAB) can be incredibly distressing. But different age groups react in different ways to medications. So it's important to find out what medications work best for who and why. For example, the PILLAR clinical study will look at how a medication approved to treat OAB symptoms affects people with OAB who are greater or equal to 65 years old.

Study-related medications will be provided free of charge. Contact our understanding study team today for a confidential, no-obligation chat.

Aries Favors will be granted, but before accepting them, you should find out what's expected of you in return. You may be better off taking care of matters without assistance.

Taurus Emotional matters will escalate if you argue. Refuse to let a stubborn attitude ruin your plans. It's important to work well with others if you want to excel.

Gemini You can dream all you want, but when it comes to getting things done, you must be realistic. Approach your goals with a practical plan in mind.

Cancer Put your time to good use. Keep busy instead of getting upset over situations you cannot change. Look for ways to minimize the negative effects of outside influences.

Leo Protect your well-being. Letting situations that are out of your control get to you will make matters worse. Bide your time and focus on getting things done.

Virgo Don't follow the crowd. Think and make decisions based on your needs, not on what someone else is prompting you to do. Physical improvements are encouraged.

Libra A business trip or a visit to a school you want to attend looks promising. If you have your questions ready, it will be easy to make a decision that will bring favorable changes.

Scorpio Discuss legal, financial, health or contractual issues in order to make progress. Look for alternative ways to deal with differences and maintain peace and civility.

Sagittarius Your aim should be to connect with people you want to spend more time with or work with. Make your intentions clear and good things will transpire.

Capricorn Business trips, interviews and getting along with your peers will be necessary if you want to bring about change or have things done your way. Don't get angry.

Aquarius Good things come to those who actively pursue what they want. Don't wait on the sideline when you should be doing your best to make things happen.

Pisces Your enthusiasm will encourage others to take advantage of your. Size up what's being asked of you and reconsider how much you want to contribute. EUGENIA LAST
